White-breasted Nuthatch

The name nuthatch results from a change in the word "nuthack" which refers to its habit of hacking away at a seed with its beak until it opens. Nuthatches travel head down on tree trunks to search for the hidden insects that woodpeckers missed on their way up the trunk. To attract white-breasted nuthatches to your yard, try a suet feeder or peanut feeder, as well as a high-quality seed blend with a good proportion of sunflower seed. Their feeding behaviour is fun to watch. Nuthatches will typically take one seed and then fly away to hide it in the crevice of a tree in order to use this as a food source later in the winter.
