Chickadee Cheer

This is the best time of year to find a yard filled with the cheery sights and sounds of adorable chickadees. There are seven species of chickadees in North America, but the Black-capped chickadee is our local cutie. Although chickadees seem to be continuously at our feeders, the main staple of their diet is insects. Enticing them to your yard is easy with irresistible treats such as suet, peanuts and black oil sunflower seeds.

It is interesting to note that chickadees tend to take one seed from a feeder, fly away to a nearby perch and eat it, and then fly back for another. The seed is usually carried away in their bill and then held in their foot as they peck at it. Naturally curious and bold, chickadees can be coaxed to feed right from your hand. Load up with sunflower seeds and stand close to your feeder or a tree with your palm flat and your hand at arm's length. Keep perfectly still, and with patience you will be rewarded with a brief visit that feels like a puff of air on your fingertips. Check out the Feeders for Under $10 section in this newsletter for great feeders for chickadees!
